ABSTRACT

The need for legal reform in criminal jurisprudence of India is an increasingly pressing issue due to the current state of the legal system. The Indian Penal Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure, and other laws have not kept up with the changing times, leading to a growing number of cases that are either not addressed or inadequately addressed. This has resulted in a lack of justice and accountability in the system.

OBJECTIVE

This research report will examine the need for legal reform in the criminal jurisprudence of India. It will begin by examining the existing legal system and the challenges it is facing. It will then look at the need for legal reform and the different initiatives that have been taken by the government and other stakeholders. Finally, it will look at the scope and challenges of legal reform in criminal jurisprudence of India, and suggest possible solutions.

INTRODUCTION

The Indian criminal justice system is facing a number of challenges. The existing legal framework is outdated and has not kept up with the changing times. This has resulted in a lack of justice and accountability in the system. Additionally, existing laws are not in line with the global standards of justice, leading to a lack of fairness in the system. Moreover, the current system of criminal jurisprudence in India is highly inefficient and time-consuming.

DISCUSSION

In order to address the challenges mentioned above, there is a need for legal reform in the criminal jurisprudence of India. The first step in this process should be to revise and update the existing criminal laws to make them more effective and efficient. This should be done in consultation with the stakeholders in the criminal justice system.

Additionally, the current evidence rules should be revised to reflect the current needs of the criminal justice system. This should be done in consultation with legal experts and other stakeholders. The government of India has taken a number of steps towards legal reform in criminal jurisprudence.

The Supreme Court of India has issued a number of important judgments which have had a positive impact on the criminal justice system. Additionally, the government has taken a number of initiatives to bring transparency and efficiency to the criminal justice system. However, there is still a long way to go before we can achieve the goal of legal reform in the criminal jurisprudence of India. Some of the challenges that remain include a lack of resources and political will, as well as poor infrastructure and a lack of public awareness.

Additionally, there is a need for better coordination between different stakeholders in the criminal justice system. In order to address the challenges mentioned above, there is a need for a concerted effort from all stakeholders. The government should take the lead in this process and should work in consultation with other stakeholders such as legal experts, civil society organizations, and the media. There is also a need for increased public awareness and education on the need for legal reform in the criminal jurisprudence of India.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, legal reform in criminal jurisprudence of India is an urgent need. The existing legal system is outdated and has not kept up with the changing times. This has resulted in a lack of justice and accountability in the system. The government of India has taken a number of steps to address this issue, but there is still a lot that needs to be done. All stakeholders need to work together to bring about the desired change.
